"Access Grind"

Access Grind: Skate Without Limits was held to promote awareness of adaptive skateboarding for persons with disabilities in the community. It was a two day event that included a demonstration and clinic coached by two adaptive skateboarder team members from Adaptive Action Sports. This first time event was hosted by Texas Ski Ranch and the Recreation Therapy (RT) cohort 2012 master's students and 2 undergraduate independent study RT students, Jessica Raya and Rebecca Collins. The clinic had 12 attendees that included disabilities such as visual impairments, spina bifida, amputations, and cerebral palsy. The demonstration was held in conjunction with a national wakeboard competition called Cablestock that drew hundreds of spectators to see adaptive skateboarding. What is also exceptional about this team of people is their willingness to see beyond the traditional sports and reach another sector of our community whose interest and talents lie in non-traditional sports.
