Experiences in International Studies

The major in international studies examines the connections between international and regional issues. Students concentrate on a language and area of the world while learning how to analyze complex global affairs. International studies majors assess the historical, economic, geographic, and social scientific aspects of countries. The program requires students to complete a study abroad or complete an internship with Center for International Studies approval. Students may further develop a professional community at association or networking events or join student organizations for a well-rounded experience.
