Experiences in Communication Design

The communication design major is a dynamic program which combines foundational curriculum in general studies, art foundations, art history, and art and design electives, with courses in interactive design, typography, art direction, corporate identity, sustainable packaging, brand experience, human-centered design, environmental graphics, and design research, all of which prepare the student for professional practice. Students may further their education with independent study courses, job shadowing, and professional internships. Other activities in the student experience may include study abroad, student organization membership, leadership and service, and a wide variety of events.
