Experiences in Fashion Merchandising

Fashion merchandising majors explore all areas of fashion, from manufacturing to retailing. Students take courses in textiles, fashion promotion, product development, store management and buying. Every student completes an internship and is required to complete a business administration minor to prepare further for success in the industry. The program offers a finely tuned curriculum that produces graduates with high-level critical thinking, communication and analytical skills. Rigorous course work prepares students for team-oriented leadership using cutting-edge industry technology. Strong corporate relationships bring students access to industry thought leaders in both classroom settings and corporate-sponsored events. Students gain valuable hands-on experience through technology-based assignments, industry visits, and internships.
